National Surveys of Children's Exposure to Violence

Since 2002, David Finkelhor, Heather Turner and I have conducted 4 nationally representative studies on youth victimization, co-sponsored by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention and the Centers for Disease Control. These are the U.S.'s primary surveillance of victimization against youth that is not reported to authorities, including the only nationally representative figures for numerous forms of victimization, including statutory rape, exposure to shootings and riots, and several other forms of victimization, crime, and abuse. It is also the only national surveillance for most forms of victimization against children under the age of 12.

This program has received multiple grants:

2015-2016. "Supplemental Analyses of the National Surveys of Children's Exposure to Violence"

2012-2015. "National Study of Children Exposed to Violence III: Trend Study"
 2010-2013. "National Study of Children Exposed to Violence II: Trend Study"

National Study of Children Exposed to Violence: Assessing Exposure to Family Violence

The goal of this study is to obtain data on the experiences of a nationally representative sample of 525 children who have been exposed to family violence in the previous year. The project will: 1) describe the law enforcement response, service system response and family response to the episodes of family violence as they relate to the exposed children; 2) analyze children's and parents' judgments about the positive and negative features of law enforcement and service system response; and 3) determine whether law enforcement, service system and family system responses were associated with higher or lower levels of current distress among the exposed children.
